Malaysian Public Service director-general Datuk Mohd Khairul Adib Abdul Rahman said the CeIO's success was a continuing platform for the Malaysian Anti-Corruption Commission (MACC) in its fight against corruption.

Khairul said the government was committed to implement the prosperity of institutions such as the establishment of the Malaysian Ombudsman, which would replace the Bureau of Public Complaints to improve the quality and delivery of a more effective and comprehensive service and training system.

"It also ensures that complaints towards ministries and agencies can be more effectively addressed.

"I believe that through the learning modules contained in the CeIO programme, which has been implemented by the MACC, we can create more expertise in transforming organisations into high-integrity organisations," he said when officiating at the event.
